

An isolated system may in principle change its state to any other of the same energy (the four colored boxes in the horizontal row), but the First Law forbids it to change to states of different energy (the brown-tinted boxes).

